R+S Experimentals

In 1944 the Bureau of Engraving and Printing decided to experiment with a new paper for silver certificates. Some 1935A silver certificates were marked with a red R to designate the regular paper; others were marked with a red S to signify that they were printed on special paper. Thanks to their attempt, we now have terrific collectibles!

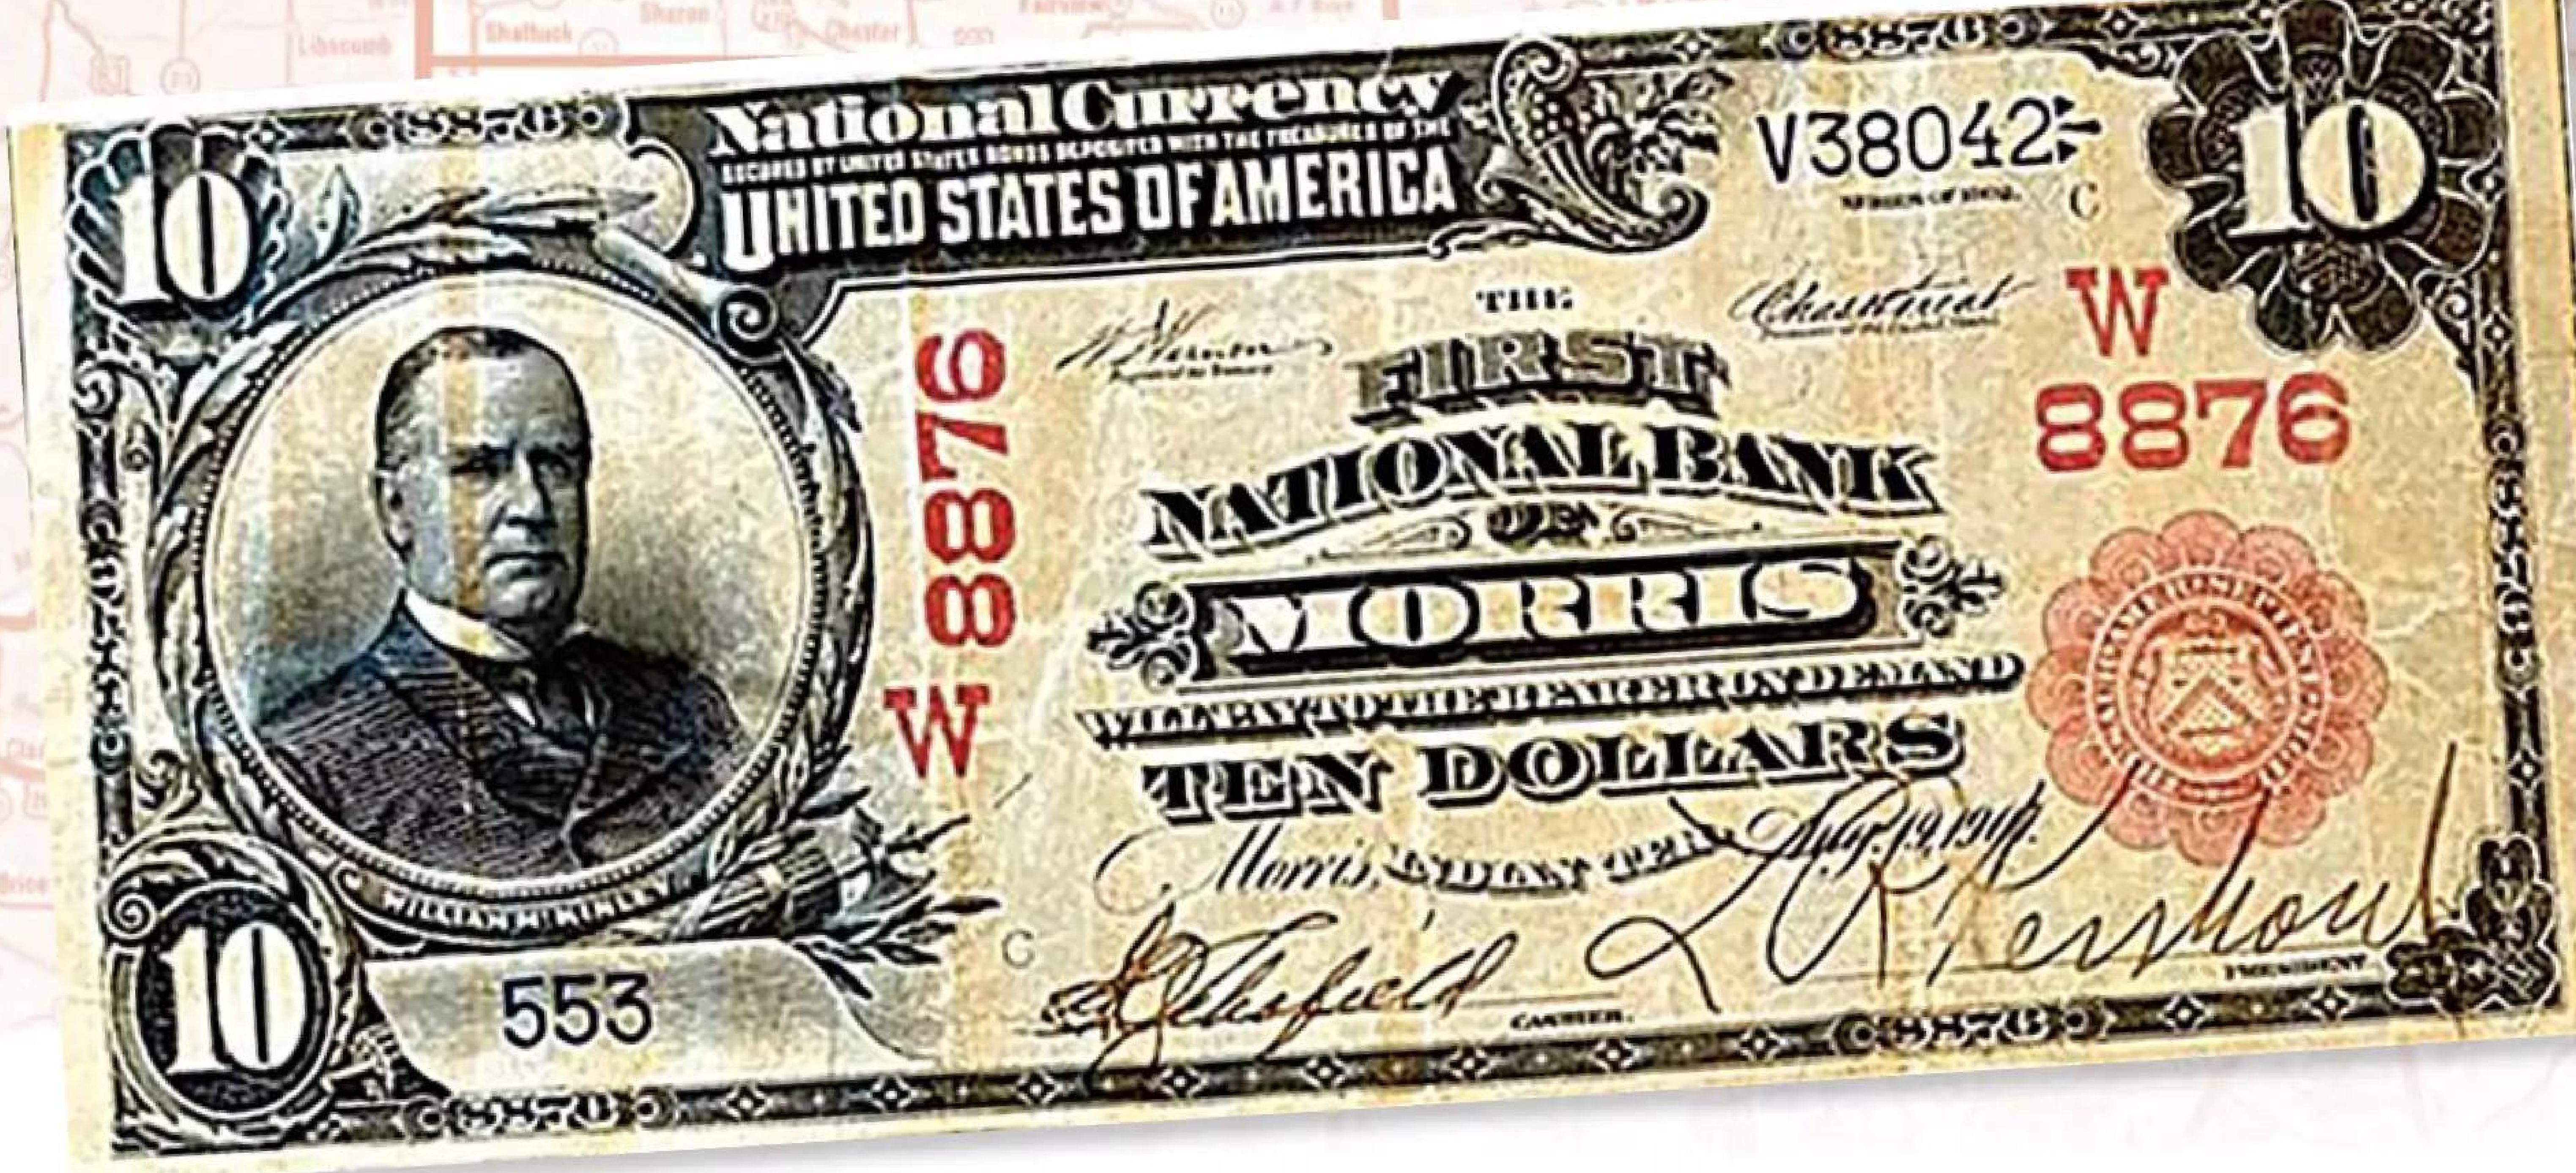
The Discovery of a Morris Indian Territorial 1902 Red Seal



The Indian Territory is one of my favorites. There were 175 territorial-issuing banks, the largest number for any territory. The territory comes in with the third-highest reported number of territorial notes at 166.

Sounds common, but the fact is that the vast majority of those issuing banks were minimally capitalized banks with tiny circulations in towns most people have never heard of. The result is that, on a note-by-note basis, just about every reported Indian territorial is a flaming rarity in its own right. Consequently, when I get wind of a new one, I can't wait to see where it is from.

Jess Lipka dropped a photo of this recent discovery in my lap, and as expected, it is another one-of-a-kind flamer.

As I was logging it into my territorial census, I discovered that The First National Bank of Morris holds a unique distinction. It was the last bank to be chartered in the territory. Oklahoma was admitted as a state on November 16, 1907. This bank was organized on August 19, 1907, and received its charter on September 17, a day shy of a month before statehood. Two days after receiving their charter, the bankers opened for business on September 19.

The bank was capitalized at a respectable $100,000 for a town of its size. A total of 600 sheets of 10-10-10-20 territorial 1902 red seals were printed to support its circulation of $25,000. That stock lasted for a while into the statehood era.

The bank went on to issue from 200 10-10-10-20 sheets of red seal state notes, 2,090 sheets of blue seal date backs, and 1,393 sheets of blue seal plainbacks. Oddly, none of these has been reported. The territorial is the only note reported from the bank.

The bank was liquidated on May 4, 1921, in order to be succeeded by the Morris National Bank, charter 11932, with the same president, L. S. Bagley. He had served as cashier in the First National Bank of Morris from its inception until 1918, when he took over as president from T. A. Johnson.

As with its predecessor, the Morris National Bank maintained a circulation of $25,000, but only through 1924. The bankers then sold their securing bonds and left the note-issuing business. In 1926, W. H. Septer replaced Bagley as president. Septer found it advantageous to operate under a more liberal state charter, so he liquidated the Morris National Bank on December 30, 1929, to reorganize it as Morris State Bank. During its life, the Morris National Bank issued from 820 sheets of 10-10-10-20 1902 plainbacks. Only two low-grade $20s are reported.

MORRIS, OKLAHOMA

Morris is a town with a 2020 census of 1,299, located 34 miles southwest of Muscogee on U.S. 62. It originated as a cattle shipping point on the Ozark and Cherokee Central Railroad, which later became the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway, popularly known as the "Frisco." The town's post office dates from January 1904.

The townsite was platted in 1904 by L. R. Kershaw, an attorney and an immigration agent for the Frisco railroad. He named the town after H. E. Morris, a Frisco executive.

Significantly for this article, Kershaw founded two of the earliest banks in Morris: the Farmer's State Bank in 1905 and the First National Bank in 1907. Notice that Kershaw signed the territorial note as president.

The early growth of Morris came from coal mining from shallow deposits. This was followed by an oil boom with the discovery of an oil field known as the Morris Pool. A tornado hit on April 26, 1984, and destroyed the entire business district and about half the homes in town, resulting in 9 deaths. Morris's economy is now dominated by ranching and farming.

Currently, there are Indian territorials reported from 82 banks. Of those, 45 are represented by one note. None are reported from 93 issuers. There are plenty more of these rarities yet to be found! ■

U.S. ERROR CURRENCY

This gorgeous "Series of 1882" $5 brown back issued by the Midland National Bank of Washington Court House (C.H.), Ohio, is from the author's collection. The wonderful title block of "Washington C.H." really pops on this note. Note the beautiful pen signatures of M.S. Daugherty, cashier, and S.W. Cissna, president.

I hope this finds my readers in good spirits and enjoying the summer so far. This month's article is part one of a two-part series highlighting the Midland National Bank of Washington Court House, Ohio. This month we will look at the town, its history, and the bank and its issues. Next month, we will learn how this bank and its president were caught up in the famous Teapot Dome Scandal of the 1920s and how it was involved in one of the most important Supreme Court decisions of the time on legislative power.

Washington Court House, Ohio, is the seat of Fayette County, Ohio, located midway between Dayton and Chillicothe, and is pretty much in the center of the Cincinnati-Dayton-Columbus triangle. The city is located at the junction of U.S. Routes 22 and 62, with U.S. Route 35 acting as a bypass. It is 40 miles south of Columbus and 49 miles east of Dayton. The population was 14,400 in the last census.

Officially named Washington as far back as the 1830s, the "Court House" suffix was used to distinguish the city from other places in the state that have Washington in its name—Old Washington, New Washington, Washingtonville, and Port Washington. The suffix is attributed to settlers from Virginia, where the naming convention of Court House was used with county seats (e.g., Appomattox Court House).

The abbreviated initials "Washington C. H." were then added to maps and postal guides, and the de facto use of Washington Court House persisted over time. The name was made official when the city adopted a new charter in the early 2000s, making it the longest city name in the state.

The area around Washington Court House was initially settled by veterans of the American Revolution who received the land from the government as payment for their service in the war. Washington Court House's first settlers appear to have been Edward Smith Sr. and his family, who emigrated from Pennsylvania in 1810. Smith and his family constructed a crude house in the thick woodlands near Paint Creek, but their efforts to clear the land were interrupted by his departure for military service in the War of 1812. Soon after returning from his martial pursuits, Smith drowned while attempting to cross a flooded creek, but his widow and 10 children survived and prospered despite the absence of their patriarch.

Smith's descendants remained prominent in Fayette County for more than a century after he arrived from Pennsylvania, although many had left Washington Court House for other parts of the county. A family residence still stands on U.S. Route 62, not far outside the city's eastern boundary.

In 1833, Washington Court House (then known as Washington) contained a printing office, seven stores, two taverns, two groceries, a schoolhouse, a meeting house, and about 70 residential houses.

The town occupied an important position at the crossroads of several plank roads, and the arrival of rail service led to further growth. It was already substantial when hit by a tornado in 1885, which caused loss of life and significant damage to the commercial district.

On October 17, 1894, the then-city was the site of the Washington Court House Riot of 1894, which was one of the last attempted lynchings in Ohio. On October 16, a crowd gathered outside the Fayette County Courthouse with the intent to lynch William "Jasper" Dolby, a Black man who had been convicted of sexually assaulting a white woman. Ohio Governor William McKinley called the militia to subdue the crowd. The next day, the crowd rushed the courthouse doors and were warned to leave or be shot. The crowd ignored the warning and continued to batter the doors. Colonel Alonzo B. Coit then ordered his troops to fire through the courthouse doors, which killed five men. Colonel Coit was indicted for manslaughter but was acquitted at trial. After the trial, Governor McKinley stated, "The law was upheld as it should have been... but in this case at fearful cost... lynching cannot be tolerated in Ohio." The courthouse doors were not repaired or replaced, still standing with the bullet holes from the 1894 riot.

The city had national banking early in its life with the First National Bank of Washington, charter #284, which operated from 1864 until its liquidation in 1878. The city also had the Fayette County National Bank of Washington, charter #1972, a short-lived bank from 1872 to 1875. This article, and the second part next month, will concentrate on Washington's main bank, the Midland National Bank of Washington Court House, charter #4763. The bank was organized in 1892 and operated for 36 years until it was liquidated at the end of May 1928.

The Midland National Bank issued "Series of 1882" brown and date back notes until 1912, when it continued with "Series of 1902" date and plain back notes until the liquidation. The total issue of over 36 years was not large, just a tad more than $670,000, or roughly $18,500 per year. Currently, just 11 notes are reported, with one $5 brown back and the rest split more or less evenly between 1902 date and plain back notes.

Since the city was long referred to as Washington C.H. locally, the bank's title reflected this, making it quite the anomaly among national bank titles. It remains the only note-issuing national bank to have the initials "C.H." in its title, and frankly, the only one to have any similar use of initials other than those used in a private name bank (for example, the H.Y. Davis National Bank of Cave City, Kentucky). While another courthouse-named town exists—the First National Bank of Cape May Court House, New Jersey, the words are spelled out. The Midland National Bank is the only one that uses such initialing in its name.

This bank's odd name appealed to me when I purchased a "Series of 1902" note many years ago at a Memphis International Paper Money Show. I didn't think much more about it until a couple of years back when an absolutely gorgeous "Series of 1882" $5 brown back popped up out of the proverbial woods and landed in an auction held by Heritage Auctions.

The note was a peach, and I was delighted to add it to my collection. The bold tombstone with the name "Washington C.H." in bold, black-lined white lettering really popped. The note has lovely pen signatures of bank president S.W. Cissna and cashier Mal S. Daugherty (much more about him next month). I am quite sure you will appreciate why I wanted to add this beauty to my collection.

Washington Court House is a lovely small city that is alive and active. The town is replete with attractive period buildings and historic structures; there are no abandoned storefronts or dilapidated homes. The downtown area is full of shops and other businesses. The city has an original and well-maintained Carnegie Library at 127 S. North Street, which has been expanded and serves the community well.

The city is dominated by the Fayette County Courthouse (hence the town's name), a three-story Second Empire style building that is the third courthouse on the site. The building was designed by architect David W. Gibbs and was constructed between 1882 and 1885. The entrances are set into a recessed arched alcove with two long arched windows on the fronts. Above the alcove is a small balcony topped by a pediment, which is supported by four Ionic columns. The pediment contains a tympanum decorated with a wreath surrounded by flags. A balustrade lines the balcony. The second floor contains arched windows set into rusticated stone blocks, and decorative carved wreaths are set between each window. The roof is supported by an entablature with dentil moldings and a balustrade lines the flat roof. A central tower rises on a solid bricked drum, which supports an arched and pillared bell tower. The bell tower is topped by a four-faced clock that supports a dome rising to a statue.

The Midland National Bank was located on what was known then as "Banker's Row." The bank was on the corner of East Court Street and Central Place, next to the county courthouse and adjacent to the other banks in town: the Fayette County Bank and the Commercial Bank. The Fayette County Historical Society was kind enough to provide me with photos of the bank and environs. I have also included a picture of the bank building as it appears today in town. The bank building has been considerably altered, as can be seen, and the rest of Banker's Row no longer resembles the 1920s view, with much larger and more modern buildings replacing the smaller ones seen in the images.

This ends part one of this two-part article. Next month, we will learn about the Midland National Bank and its president's role in the Teapot Dome Affair, the biggest political scandal of the 1920s. Stay tuned!

The Mysterious Image on a Colombian 1,000 Pesos

Obverse and reverse of a 2006 1,000-peso Colombian bank note. Unless noted, all photographs are courtesy of the author.

Was Fidel Castro immortalized in a Colombian Bank Note? Unfortunately, the answer to this question remains uncertain.

Some people believe that Fidel Castro's (1926–2016) image was in fact included in a Colombian bank note, while others reject the idea, alluding to it as a mere coincidence. There is even a third line of thought that wants people to ignore this mystery as Colombia has had enough problems. Rather than taking sides with any of these positions, this article summarises the facts and allows the reader to form their own conclusions on the issue.

The controversial bank note, with a face value of 1,000

pesos, was issued on November 17, 2006. The obverse shows the leader of the Colombian Liberal Party, the politician Jorge Eliécer Gaitán (1903–1948), known as "El Caudillo," with a crowd of citizens in the background. Although an impressive image, the important side of the note for this article is actually the reverse, where the politician is depicted greeting the multitude with his right hand raised.

The controversy started in March 2012, six years after the bank notes entered circulation. Carlos Gustavo Álvarez, a journalist writing for the Colombian newspaper Portafolio, published an article echoing insistent rumours that had just appeared on the internet that alerted to the close resemblance existing between the Cuban leader Fidel Castro and one of the figures on the reverse of the bank note.

The polemic escalated rapidly and soon made headlines, not only in Colombian media but also by the international press. A young person among the crowd, placed next to Eliécer Gaitán's armpit, looks indeed like a young Fidel Castro. To add more suspicion, the figure is one of the few members in the abundant crowd that had been highlighted using black ink, and it is the only one not partially covered by Eliécer Gaitán's signature.

While admitting the striking similarity, the graphic artist who designed the bank note, José Antonio Suárez Londoño (1955–), categorically denied having represented Fidel Castro in the reverse of the bank note. He further reassured the then-manager of the Bank of the Republic of Colombia, José Darío Uribe (1958–), that depicting Castro in the note had never been his intention.

Before receiving the artist's reply, Uribe told the media that Castro's presence in the bank note was "a possibility." He further added, "The artist had been given absolute freedom to produce the drawing and that only he knew whether this was a coincidence or a deliberate act."

Suárez additionally stated that his original sketch suffered some modifications by the experts of the British company Thomas de la Rue, who engraved the design and added the required security features. It is unlikely, however, that said modifications would have affected the facial expression of the supposed Castro image in such a way as to make it look like him.

In 2004, Suárez won a competition organised by the Bank of Colombia for this bank note design, which entered circulation two years later. After studying Eliécer Gaitán's life, he produced the drawing based on photographs of followers attending his meetings.

It is necessary at this point to go back to the man to whom the bank note is dedicated. Jorge Eliécer Gaitán was a Colombian politician with nationalist ideals. Under his influence, the Liberal Party adopted an increasingly left-wing profile. His ideas are considered to be a form of liberal socialism in Colombia.

1936 portrait of Jorge Eliécer Gaitán.

Gaitán was a likely winner of the presidential elections that would be held in Colombia in 1950. However, he was assassinated on April 9, 1948. His death provoked a violent riot in Colombia's capital known as the "Bogotazo," and a further ten years of violence, a period known as "La Violencia," during which at least 300,000 people died. His alleged murderer, Juan Roa Sierra, was killed by an enraged mob, and his motivations were never known. One version implies that the assassination was part of an anti-leftist plan devised by the CIA.

And this is where Fidel Castro enters the scene. The late Cuban leader was then a 22-year-old university law student at the University of Havana. Sponsored by Juan Perón's Argentine government, Castro travelled to Bogotá, Colombia, on April 3, 1948, leading a Cuban student group to attend a Latin American student congress. The event, aimed at denouncing imperialistic practices, was deliberately made to coincide in the city with the celebration of the IX Pan-American Conference that would give birth to the Organization of American States.

In Colombia, Castro met with other student representatives and on April 7, sat with Jorge Eliécer Gaitán in his office. Castro himself later said that he became captivated by Gaitán's ideas. He even had a second interview with Gaitán scheduled for April 9 at 14:15, as the Colombian leader had written in his agenda. But while preparing for the appointment, Castro was surprised by the news of the assassination and the ensuing clashes between the governing Conservatives (backed by the army) and the leftist Liberals.

Castro joined the Liberal cause by stealing a gun from a police station (although a subsequent police investigation concluded that he had not been involved in any killings) and played an active role in the ensuing protests. He is also reported to have joined the protests in Bogotá on April 1948 during the summit of the Organization of American States. On April 11, rumours spread by the Conservatives accused the Cuban students led by Castro of being responsible for the uprising. An Argentinian diplomat took Castro and the other members of the delegation to the Cuban Consulate, which quickly had them flown back to Cuba on April 12.

When the news was released in 2012 about the alleged depiction of Fidel Castro on a Colombian bank note, it caused unrest among the ranks of the then-ruling Conservative party. Surprisingly, within days after the news became public, the Bank of Colombia announced the introduction of new 1,000-peso bimetallic coins to gradually replace the bank notes of the same denomination. The replacement was officially explained as the coins had a significantly longer shelf life than the bank notes of said denomination. While the coins were indeed launched during the second semester of 2012, a fraction of the controversial bank notes were still in circulation. However, no similarities with Castro or any other political figure can be found in the referred coins, as they display a loggerhead turtle on the obverse. It is also worth mentioning Suárez was also chosen to design the coin.

A possible way to end this controversy once and for all would be to disclose the actual photos on which Suárez based his sketch. So far, this has not happened. ■

At first glance, the new 1,000- and 2,000-escudo bank notes from the Banco de Cabo Verde may appear the same as its 2015 predecessors. However, upon closer inspection, the notes, which depict funaná musician Codé di Dona on the 1,000 and morna singer Cesária Évora on the 2,000, are equipped with new security features.

Thailand

The Bank of Thailand's new commemorative note is a celebration. The pink colored 100-baht note was created to honor the 150th anniversary of the Ministry of Finance. Although similar to the 100 baht in appearance, this new note differs in that a red legend commemorating the anniversary and the date "April 14, 2025," is placed in the bottom middle of the face.

Good Sales at the BEP

It's been known for a long time that the cost of producing our 1¢ and 5¢ coins is ridiculously higher than the face value of the minted coins. No one is saying anything about the cost of printing or stockpiling the relatively unused $2 bank note or the expense we are incurring as the proposed Harriet Tubman $20 continues to be developed over what appears to be an inordinate amount of time.

The Trump administration is auditing just about every aspect of governmental departments, but at the time this commentary is being written, there has been no news of an audit or other close examination of the operations of the U.S. Mint or the Bureau of Engraving and Printing (BEP).

According to Public Law 81-656, the BEP is financed through a revolving fund that is disbursed for administrative expenses and other direct and indirect costs through the sale of products. It has been estimated that the BEP prints about 38 million bank notes with an estimated face value of $541 million daily. The BEP's Public Sales Program, through which numismatic products are offered, resumed sales in late 2023. The most popular BEP products appear to be their uncut currency sheets.

There is a 56-page "Annual Financial Report" through which the nuts and bolts of the bureau are presented. According to BEP Director Patricia Colins, "The BEP ended the fiscal year with a net positive income, successfully delivering 5.7 billion currency notes in FY 2024 to the FRB and is on track to complete BEP's Annual Print Order commitment of 5.9 billion notes for calendar year 2024."

Since the BEP does not appear to be in the same quandary as the U.S. Mint, the only efficiency that might want to be revisited is the $2 and development of a different $20, but that's speculation on my part.

I've always had a soft spot for "Series of 1929" notes with town names set in plain Gothic type, such as seen on this Blooming Grove, Texas, note. This font was made exclusively, but infrequently, at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing (BEP). It was used to make stopgap plates in the fall of 1929 to maintain production as Barnhart Brothers & Spindler (BB&S)—the firm awarded the contract to supply the Bureau with 1929 logotype overprinting plates—fell behind on deliveries. Later on, the BEP occasionally used the font for rush orders and plates when BB&S went into bankruptcy.

Adam Stroup has also avidly sought this variety, and, between us, we think the First National Bank in Blooming Grove is the only bank in the country to have received $50 and $100 notes with the variety.

The bank was chartered in 1931, and the bankers issued only $50s and $100s. Only 25 sheets worth of type 1 $50s and six sheets of $100s went out before the bank went into receivership in 1933. Miraculously, the only reported note from the bank is this attractive circulated example from the top of the first sheet of $50s.

OBSOLETE 2¢ NOTES AND SCRIP – PART 1

From 1814–1816 and the Post-Civil War Era

By Rick Melamed

In the last issue of Bank Note Reporter, I explored 1¢ notes mostly printed in the 19th century. Because of the meager purchasing power, 1¢ notes are quite rare; perhaps 50 varieties have appeared in auction archives

I have taken the next incremental step in this issue by exploring the various issues of 2¢ notes, including 2¢ notes from 1814–1816, sutler notes, and post-Civil War examples.

Still quite rare, but not as hard to find as the 1¢ note. Most of the 2¢ notes shown in this article have basic designs. The ornate engraving we see on higher valuation obsolete notes rarely appears on 2¢ notes; a sacrifice merchants and financial institutions had to make considering their tiny value.

Even 200 years ago, a 2¢ note did not have much purchasing power (about 50¢ to 60¢ today); the daily salary was about $1 a day. Most of these notes were issued by merchants, sutlers, local municipalities, and private banks.

In part two (July 2025 issue of Bank Note Reporter), I will showcase 2¢ notes from the Civil War era. Thanks to Stack's Bowers Galleries and Heritage Auctions for the images contained in this article.

1814–1816 2¢ DEPRESSION NOTES

A number of non-federal fractional notes were issued between 1814 and 1816 when the U.S. economy was in an economic depression. Not a lot remains since these ephemeral notes were not made to survive for over 200 years.

The main reason for the depression was the trade embargo imposed by President Thomas Jefferson in an attempt to keep the U.S. out of the War of 1812, in which Britain and France were engaged in yet another struggle for supremacy in Europe. Shipping to either country could potentially lead to a military response. Jefferson believed that keeping American shipping out of the war zone would maintain the United States out of any European conflict. As a result, the disappearance of export demand curtailed or shut down many important industries in the U.S, and the trade embargo also cut imports into the country.

In principle, the loss of foreign markets for U.S. businesses could have been compensated by a shift to production to the domestic markets but it was not enough to avoid a fiscal downturn. The outcome of the trade embargo was an economic depression.

Ultimately, Jefferson's strategy failed, and the U.S. was drawn into the war. With a dire economy, people hoarded coins, and merchants and municipalities resorted to issuing private scrip and currency to counteract the dearth of coins.

2¢ CIVIL WAR ERA SUTLER NOTES

A sutler is a civilian merchant who sells provisions to an army in the field, camp, or quarters. Mainly occurring from 1850 to 1890, sutlers sold wares from the back of a wagon or a tent, traveling with an army or to remote military outposts. Sutlers built their stores within the limits of an army post or off the defense line and required a license from the regiment commander before selling to the soldiers. Their work could be dangerous; a stray bullet killed at least one sutler during the Civil War.

Frequently, the only local suppliers of non-military goods, sutlers often monopolized desirable commodities like tobacco, coffee, sugar, and fresh produce. Sometimes sutlers dabbled into the unsavory, such as gambling, alcohol, and prostitution. Since federally issued coinage was scarce during the Civil War, sutlers often conducted transactions using Civil War sutler tokens or currency. Sutler notes are found in various denominations: 5¢, 10¢, 25¢, 50¢, $1, and $2, but rarely 1¢ and 2¢ valuations.

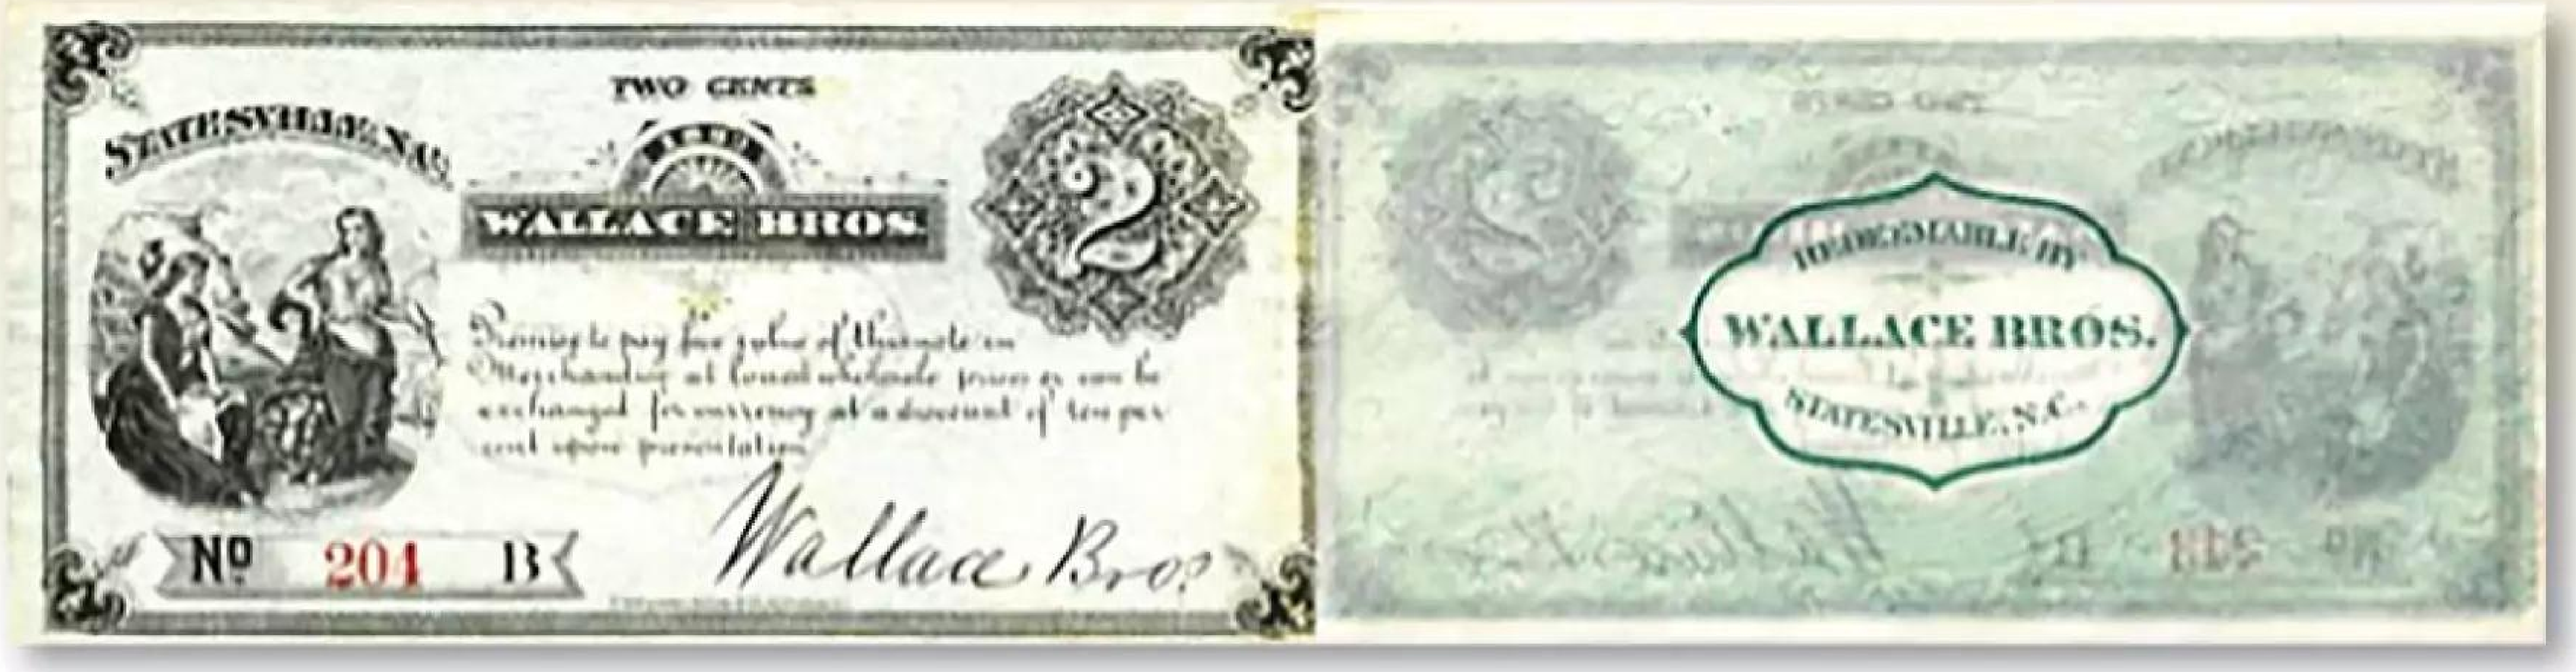
POST CIVIL WAR 2¢ NOTES



Face/Back: 1882 Wallace Brothers merchant scrip. The Wallace Brothers were merchants from Statesville, North Carolina, who were in business for 36 years until their creditors forced their liquidation. Ornately engraved note with a lovely vignette of two maidens surrounding a cornucopia of fresh produce and an expertly designed "2" in the upper right; the red serial number in the bottom left indicates a second printing.

STORK SYSTEMS OF SAVINGS PERCENTAGE SCRIP

During the first 30 years of the 20th century, the Stork System of Savings Supply Co. were marketed to children to encourage them to save. Working with participating banks, these usually included a business co-sponsor that was generally a local establishment.

The "Percentage Savings Scrip" was issued in various denominations: 1¢, 2¢, 3¢, 4¢, 5¢, 10¢, 25¢, and 50¢. All fronts and backs of the notes appear the same—an intricate design rarely seen in such small denominational notes—and only the denominations vary. Some notes are in black ink while others are in green.

General Francis E. Spinner and Fractional Currency

By Bill Brandimore

If you collect fractional currency, you are undoubtedly familiar with the name Francis E. Spinner (1802–1890). Mr. Spinner served as the Treasurer of the United States from 1861 to 1875. Mr. Spinner played an important role in stabilizing the Union's finances during the American Civil War. His legacy is literally printed on money—fractional currency, to be exact. These small-denomination notes, issued due to coin shortages during the war, became a staple of daily transactions in the 1860s and 1870s. And Spinner's signature—an elaborate and unmistakable flourish—graced each of them.

Spinner's bold and artistic signature became so iconic that it was instantly recognizable across the nation. It added a sense of authenticity and personal accountability to the currency at a time when trust in government finances was fragile. His face also appeared on the 50¢ fractional note, making him one of the few officials honored on paper money during their lifetime. This visibility made Spinner a household name and a recognizable figure to the broader public.

Spinner's contributions went far beyond penmanship. He was known as a diligent and principled man who often walked the halls of the Treasury building at night to ensure that operations ran smoothly. During one of these nightly rounds, an incident occurred that forever cemented his reputation—not just as a public servant, but as a man of fairness, values, and integrity.

In 1862, an African American woman named Sophia Brown Holmes (c. 1825–1900), who was working as a janitor in the Treasury Department, discovered a box of unguarded currency while cleaning. The large stack included bills with denominations as high as $1,000, an enormous sum of money at the time. Ms. Holmes faced a difficult choice: she feared she could be accused of theft if she tried to report the discovery and was found carrying the money. Instead, knowing that Mr. Spinner routinely made evening rounds, she waited until he arrived. When Spinner came to the Treasury building, she handed him the stack of notes and explained the situation.

Deeply impressed and touched by her honesty, Mr. Spinner took the unprecedented step of promoting Holmes to the position of messenger, making her the first African American woman formally employed by the federal government. President Abraham Lincoln even commended her act of integrity. This appointment marked a significant milestone in the history of African Americans and women in federal service.

Sophia Holmes would go on to have a long and respected career in the Treasury Department, serving under nine presidential administrations over 32 years. She passed away in 1900 in Washington, D.C. and is now remembered as a trailblazer and a symbol of integrity.

Like that of Sophia Holmes, Spinner's legacy represents a moment in American history when character, trust, and opportunity intersected to create lasting change, not just in the Treasury, but in the broader scope of civil service.

James Halperin Receives Professional Numismatists Guild's Highest Award

The Professional Numismatists Guild (www.PNGdealers.org) has given its highest honor, the Abe Kosoff Founders Award, to James Halperin, co-founder of Heritage Auctions. The award was presented during PNG's annual membership dinner on April 23, 2025.

The Kosoff Award is given to a PNG member-dealer who has shown steadfast dedication to the entire numismatic community and who has made a significant contribution to the Guild or to the numismatic fraternity. The award is named after PNG's Founding President, who spearheaded the launch of the organization and served as its first President in 1954.

Halperin became a coin dealer as a teenager. In 1982 he partnered with Steve Ivy (PNG President from 2003 to 2005) to form what is now Heritage Auctions, the world's largest rare coin and collectibles auction firm. In 1984, Halperin became a leading pioneer in standardized coin grading with the creation of NCI, the Numismatic Certification Institute, the first privately owned collectibles grading service. He has been a member of PNG for 33 years.

The Kosoff Award and other honors were announced and presented following the PNG Day activities prior to the 2025 Central States Numismatic Society Convention (www.csns.org) in the Chicago suburb of Schaumburg, Illinois.

These are the other PNG award winners honored at the dinner.

CASH TRICKY TO USE IN SPAIN

False rumors in Spain suggest the €50 bank note might be withdrawn.

Since Spain is a member of the European Union and the EU's currency union, the financial transactions you make in that country should be easy if you travel from any other EU nation. While Spain subscribes to the EU's common currency, unfortunately, there are differences in what you can or might not want to use as physical money.

The Bank of Spain follows the example of the European Central Bank (ECB), which halted production of the €500 bank note in 2016 due to concerns about criminal activity. The €500 bank note remains legal tender, but it will raise eyebrows should you choose to use one, and many merchants are no longer willing to accept the note.

The EU's highest-value bank note may be under fire in Spain, but so are the lowest-denomination coins. In April, Euro Weekly News reported Spain's 1¢ and 2¢ euro coins may go the way of the €500 note. The ECB has floated the idea of withdrawing the two lowest-denomination coins. Belgium, Finland, Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands, and Slovenia have taken action and discouraged using the coins. Due to fears that the withdrawal of the coins might spike inflation, these countries have implemented a policy of rounding up or down cash price tags to the nearest 5¢.

Austria, France, Germany, and Portugal have joined Spain by considering the expense of making the two coin denominations while dealing with the negative seigniorage resulting from their manufacture.

Few people use a bank note as high in value as €500 or the 1¢ and 2¢ euro coins due to their low purchasing power. In addition, there has been recent confusion over using €50 bank notes. During mid-April, the internet was abuzz with stories about how the workhorse €50 was also about to go extinct.

The rumor, which proved untrue, started with an online story that has since been taken down. However, the article wasn't removed quickly enough, triggering concern among Spanish consumers. Since then, the Banco de España has explained that all notes returned from credit institutions are routinely checked for quality and authenticity. Coins and notes no longer suitable for circulation are withdrawn and replaced.

Without explaining if this might be the source of the incorrect information, the central bank issued a statement, "One reason for trying to keep bank notes in good shape is to make it easier to check their security features. Although bank notes are made to last, they usually show signs of wear and tear over time from regular use."

The bank stated it examines all notes, not just €50, and that damaged notes may need to be exchanged, but don't lose their value.

Due to similar false rumors regarding the €50 in Italy, the ECB recently issued a statement to EuroVerify, "Neither Banco de España nor any other central bank within the euro area has ordered the withdrawal of any euro bank note or coin. All euro bank notes retain their value and remain in circulation."

There have also been false rumors that EU currency union member nations are trying to replace physical currency with digital, allowing authorities to monitor or block financial transactions.

University of Innsbruck (Austria) professor for security and privacy Rainer Böhme said, "Regular updates of bank notes and their security features are common practice of every central bank. The practice in the Eurosystem is that older bank notes remain valid payment instruments. There is no need to replace cash under the mattress."

According to University of Cardiff criminology professor Michael Levi, "Obviously the larger the denomination, the easier they are for criminals to store because they require less space and weight for value, though they would have to exchange lower denomination notes for €50 ones, as not many drug purchasers are likely to have them. Notes higher than €50 in some jurisdictions may look suspicious and hard to exchange. Perhaps damaged €50 notes may be harder for people to tell if they are genuine or not, and harder for automatic machines to analyze—or it may be that they are more likely to be damaged via lifestyles of street criminals."

NAMIBIA EXPERIENCES NEGATIVE SIGNIORAGE

By Richard Giedroyc

It's difficult to ignore the well-broadcast news that U.S. President Donald Trump ordered the U.S. Mint to cease production of the 1¢ due to the coin costing more than three times its face value to manufacture.

This is news in one way, yet in another, it's not. In recent years, other mints around the world have faced similar problems with low-value coins. The bottom line is the loss of seigniorage, the difference in the cost to manufacture a coin compared to its face value. In an ideal world, a mint can produce a coin or print a bank note for less than its face value, and that mint then either puts that seigniorage profit into its own pocket or its country's treasury.

Namibia is no different than any other nation in terms of considerations for the future of its low-denomination coins. The Bank of Namibia is now looking to update its coin series for the first time in 32 years. As might be expected, the price of metals used in striking Namibia's coins is quite different from three decades ago, making the central bank take a deep breath and reconsider whether it should keep the status quo.

Namibia's currency system, which is based on the Namibian dollar, was introduced in 1990 as a replacement for the South African rand. The two currencies are on par. The Namibian circulating coinage consists of nickel-bonded steel 5¢, 10¢, and 50¢ and aluminum-bronze N$1 and N$5 coins. Production of the 5¢ coin was discontinued in 2019; however, the coins remain legal tender. Namibia's current coins feature various local fauna and flora on the obverse, with the national heraldry on the reverse.

Namibian bank notes have been issued in denominations of N$10, N$20, N$30, N$50, N$100, and N$200. These notes are coated with a Securicoat varnish as an anti-counterfeiting device.

The N$10 and N$20 bank notes feature a vignette of Sam Nujoma and the Parliament building in Windhoek on the front. In contrast, the higher denominations feature Hendrik Witbooi with the Parliament building. The standard reverse of the notes features the national heraldry that is accompanied by a springbok antelope on the N$10, three standing red hartebeest on the N$20, five standing kudo antelope on the N$50, three standing oryx antelope on the N$100, and three standing roan antelope on the N$200.

A commemorative N$30 note introduced in 2020 is printed on polymer. It features a vignette of Namibia's founding president Sam Nujoma, and former president Hifikepunye Pohamba and then-current president Hage Geingob on the front. The back features the Namibian black rhinoceros.

A N$60 note was recently unveiled on which the now late president Hage Geingob is honored. The commemorative note is a one-off print collector's item that can be used as legal tender.

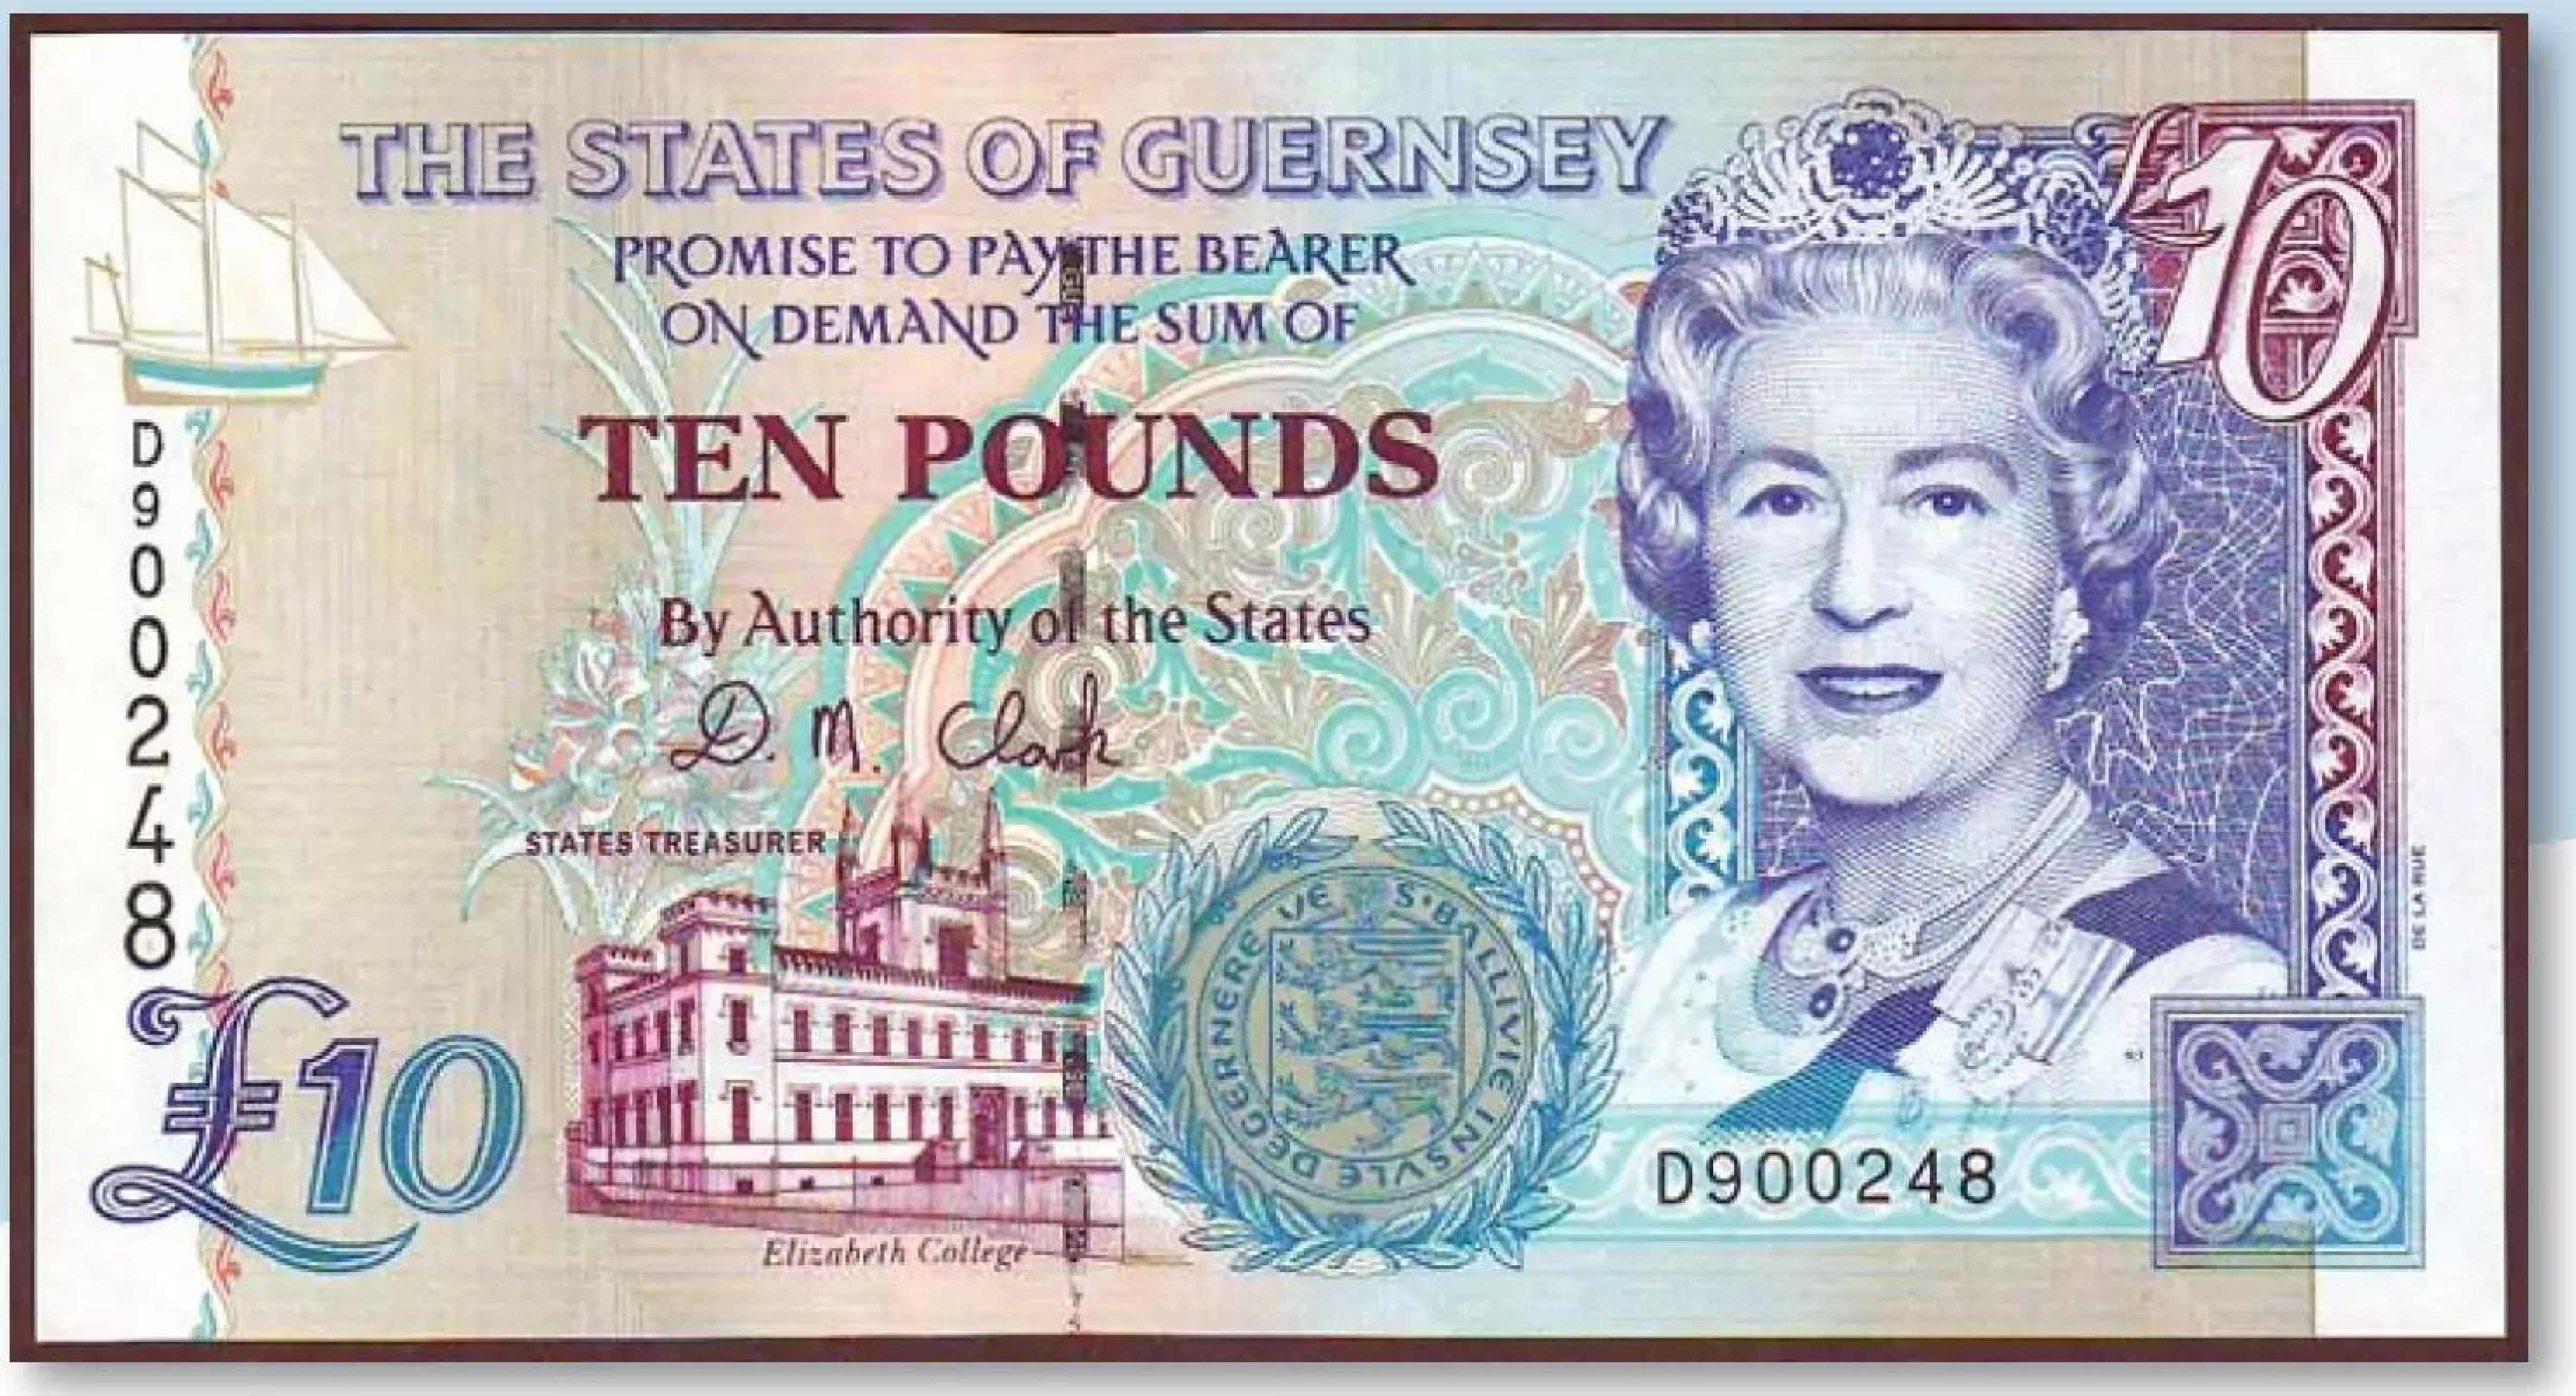
Bank of Namibia Governor Johannes Gawaxab said, "The number 60 carries profound symbolic meaning, reflecting his [Geingob's] extensive commitment to the country throughout these decades."

Gawaxab also announced a new series of coins and bank notes to be released in June. According to the governor, "This series will incorporate the latest security features while ensuring our bank notes and coins remain modern, resilient, and secure."

The central banker has previously explained, "The need for the bank to undertake a minor upgrade on the current bank note series and a complete overhaul of the coin series has been identified. In terms of bank notes, it became imperative to enhance their security features to remain abreast of technological advancements while protecting the currency against counterfeiting. For the coins, the objective is to modernize the current coin series, allowing for the incorporation of state-of-the-art security features. The review of coins is also crucial to manage and mitigate negative seigniorage, a situation where production costs exceed the coin's face value. This issue has become more common due to the increased price of metals in coin production. Addressing this promptly will help to optimize resources, address negative seigniorage, and sustain the currency system efficiently."

While the information on the upgrades being made to bank notes has been well communicated, there hasn't been much information about the coins other than that they will have increased security features. Since old bank notes will remain as legal tender, it is assumed that the current coinage will receive the same extension.

Guernsey Plans for New Bailiwick Bank Notes



By Bank Note Reporter Staff

Guernsey £10. Photograph sourced from alt55/ebay.com.

Upon the death of Queen Elizabeth II, many former British Overseas Territories like Barbados and Belize have chosen not to feature British royalty on their new currency. Rather, the countries are forgoing the new royal portrait of King Charles III for images that better reflect their respective histories and cultures, such as local fauna, indigenous motifs, or illustrations of civic leaders.

This trend has recently been embraced by a nation within the British Crown: Guernsey. The island's government agency, the States of Guernsey, is currently executing a major redesign of its bank notes, and a royal portrait is not in the design plans.

Located west of Normandy, France, in the English Channel, Guernsey is the second largest island in the Channel Islands and has been a British crown dependency since 1204. Despite its dependency status, the island is a self-governing territory with an elected government and own financial system. Although not a part of the United Kingdom, Guernsey acknowledges the royal British monarch, and much of its circulating paper money—the Guernsey pound referred to as Bailiwick bank notes—features a portrait of the Queen on the obverse. The only note that does not show the Queen is the £1, which depicts a scene from the market in St. Peter Port.

However, by 2027, the island's circulating bank notes (£1, £5, £10, and £20) will embrace a completely different look and feel. "It has been some 30 years since our notes were last redesigned, and now is the right time to update them," says Guernsey treasurer Bethan Haines to the BBC. Due to the closure of paper mills, the notes' composition will be transitioned from paper to polymer with up-to-date security details.

The appearance of the notes is currently being finalized, and will showcase local flora and fauna, natural landscapes, and modern and historic buildings. These designs were created by three Guernsey-based artists—Hayley Mallett, Rachael de la Mare, and Natasha K. HE—selected by a committee from a public call for submissions by the States of Guernsey last year. According to the BBC, Mallett and de la Mare collaborated on the face of the notes, while K.H.E.'s urban architecture illustrations will be on the back.

A tentative plan for redesigning the £50 is in the works, but according to the States of Guernsey's website, it will not be put into production if the public usage of the denomination declines.

British-based bank note printing company De La Rue will produce the new bank notes. The founder of De La Rue, printer and businessman Thomas De La Rue, was born and raised in Guernsey. For more information about this upcoming series, go to gov.gg.

Bermuda Monetary Authority Wins IBNS Bank Note of the Year

As Numismatic News' Coin of the Year nears its announcement for the best-designed 2024 coins (see the June 2025 issue of World Coin News for the nominees), another numismatic-related organization has recently released a major accolade in the bank note world. The International Bank Note Society (IBNS) has announced that the Bermuda Monetary Authority's (BMA) $5 note won its prestigious Bank Note of the Year award for 2024.

Chosen by the members of the IBNS via an online voting survey, this award is given to the best-designed bank note released the previous year. This 2024 winner was chosen from a collection of 21 notes from countries across the world of varying designs. The BMA is no stranger to this competition as it won for a $2 note in 2009.

The winning note stood out among its competition with its harmonious vertical designs. The face is pink colored with purple highlights, and illustrations of Bermudian sea life swim around a profile of King Charles III. The back of the note takes the viewer to land with depictions of butterflies, flora, and scenes of Horseshoe Bay and Somerset Bridge. According to the IBNS, this note is of similar height, albeit shorter, than United States greenbacks.

The note was designed and printed by De La Rue. It is made from polymer in recognition of BMA's "Same look, Smarter Design" campaign, which advocates for more security features on its notes. Among the technologies included in this design are Argentum™, Enhanced Gemini™ patterns, half windows, and ILLUMINATE™ and ROTATE™ iridescent ink.

A Trip to Central America at Maastricht Sale

History and art came together at the Spring 2025 Maastricht Auction on May 8. The event focused on world paper money and occurred as a live session on May 8 at the Stack's Bowers' Griffin Studios in Costa Mesa, California. The auction was followed by an online-only event on May 9 that sold the Windsor Collection of Queen Elizabeth II Paper Money. Selections from the shows were also featured during the MIF Paper Money Fair in Maastricht earlier in the month.

A bank note that stood out amongst the vast options offered at these auctions was a Nicaraguan 10 pesos with a pick number (P-37) that had only once before been up for auction at Stack's Bowers (that note sold for $6,000 in August 2023). Sold for $13,200, two thousand more than its estimate of $8,000–$12,000, this 1908 Billete del Tesoro Nacional 10 pesos (PMG Choice Fine 15) remains intact and is entirely original and in problem-free condition.

According to Stack's, the note is from a highly circulated 1906–1908 series and was printed by Waterlow Bros. and Layton. Featured on the face is a portrait of Nicaraguan 19th-century politician and political leader Maximo Jerez that sits near engraved and stamped signatures. Jerez is best remembered for his involvement in the country's Liberal party and influence in shaping Nicaraguan liberalism.

Another Central American note at the auction with an even more well-known face garnered an outstanding $18,000 winning bid. Why such a large sum? Perhaps because it is a work of art...kind of. As explained by its nickname, the 1936 Costa Rica 2 colones "Mona Lisa" note from the Banco Internacional de Costa Rica (P-167, PMG Choice Uncirculated 64) indeed displays the famous portrait. Although it is not rare for a "Mona Lisa" note to appear at auction, this piece is an exceptional Choice Uncirculated example with no signs of circulation, fresh paper, and bright coloring.

Stack's Bowers notes in its catalog listing that this Waterlow & Sons printed issue is the only paper currency to feature the artwork. The auction house speculates that the inspiration for this note came after a Banco Internacional de Costa Rica employee saw the original portrait during a visit to Europe.

Gold and more were found at Sedwick Associates' Treasure, World, U.S. Coins, & Paper Money Auction 37. Taking place from May 7-9, the auction offered a treasure chest's worth of rare coins, ingots, artifacts, and paper money. Many of the coins and exonumia were sourced from shipwrecks, including hoards found in the Caribbean and the coast of Florida.

Although not found in the ruins of a ship, the paper currency sold at the event was quite the treasure. Like the other items for sale, this tender originated from equally fascinating origins, such as the Busto Collection, which was created by well-known Puerto Rican-based paper currency collector José O. Busto. The auction offered Busto notes from Caribbean locales such as Cuba and the Dominican Republic, and even the happiest place on Earth, Disney.

Bidders found the pedigree of the Busto Collection as good as gold. A high earner was a 1956 Dominican Republic 20 pesos oro (Pick 79a, PCGS Currency Fine 12) from Banco Central that sold for $3,100. This rare commemorative propaganda note shows a portrait of dictator Rafael Trujillo near text translating in English as "Year of the Benefactor of the Homeland." This note was made to celebrate Trujillo's 25th anniversary of rule over the Dominican Republic.

Although from a very different place and time than the Trujillo note, Busto's Disney commemoratives seem to have brought joy to bidders. Notes depicting some of the franchise's most well-known characters performed well despite the piece with the highest estimate ($1,000-$1,5000) not selling, a 1997 Disney $10 note featuring the "Lion King" character Simba.

A 2005 Disney $50 note starring the company's mascot, Mickey Mouse, (PMG Choice UNC 64 EPQ), won the auction's highest bid of Disney paper currency at $600. According to Sedwick, this is the highest denomination issued for Disney dollars and was created as one of two designs to commemorate the 50th anniversary of Disneyland. A brightly colored 1990 Disney $10 featuring Mickey's partner Minnie Mouse (PCGS Currency Gem New 65 PPQ) earned a lesser amount at $180.

Collectors from the Midwest and beyond were at the annual Central States Numismatic Society's (CSNS) convention. Celebrating its 86th year, the convention was held on April 23–26 at the Schaumburg Renaissance Hotel and Convention Center. A tradition of the convention is to celebrate currency from one of CSNS' 13 member states. This year was all about the Cornhusker State, Nebraska. Representing were dealers from the state and two museums (Higgins Museums of National Bank Notes and Durham Museum) that exhibited rare Nebraska money.

The event hub was centralized around an active bourse floor, which was filled with over 400 tables of dealers and exhibitors from local and afar. Navigating this vast selection was made easy as the floor was divided by specialties such as world and ancient coins and paper money. A floor above the bourse space was an auction event held by Heritage Auctions, and PCGS provided on-site grading services for visitors. Dealers were afforded the opportunity to attend PNG Dealer Day, which occurred during the first day of the weekend-long event. Also taking place amid this busy event were club meetings and the Newman Numismatic Portal Symposium, which, through a partnership between Heritage Auctions and CSNS, provided educational talks by industry experts on currency history, collecting, and the industry.

The 87th CSNS convention will take place in Schaumburg, Illinois, from April 22–25. For more information about CSNS, visit csns.org.
